CHARACTERISTICKS.

——Quid rides? mutato nomine, de te
Fabula narratur ——

COVETUOUSNESS is the contraſt of content, and the ſiſter of envy: The covetuous man is in a ſtate of univerſal war, for he would make repriſals on all mankind: He is worſe than a woman with child, for he longs for every thing he ſees, yet would not part with a ſhilling to ſave his longing; he has generally a ſtrange loſs of appetite at his own table, for which his neighbour's is the beſt cure.

THE miſer quarrels with the church of Rome for the price of their pardons and indulgences; with the church of England for their tithes and taxes, but conforms to quakeriſm to ſave the expence of ruffles; all parts of his garments are thread-bare but his pockets, which are generally laden with a pocket-book, a pencil, and a truſty key; the ſublimeſt joy of life to him is the riſe of intereſt, and the greateſt terror of death, the expences of his funeral.

THE ſloven converts the ſleeve of his coat to an handkerchief, and the ſkirts thereof to a towel, wiping his noſe in the former, and his hands in the latter: When he ſhaves he has not time to ſhift his linnen, and when he ſhifts he forgets to ſhave; if he cleans his ſhoes, he ſcrapes the dirt off with his nails, and if he pares his nails, 'tis when he is at dinner.

THE abſent man goes to court on a birth-night in a mourning ſuit: He diſpatches his footman on Sunday morning to invite ſome friends to a party at cards, but the bells reminding him that 'tis the Sabbath day, he purſues his ſervant to countermand the meſſage, and returning, apparels himſelf for church, and looking in the glaſs finds himſelf but half ſhaved: This miſtake alſo he corrects, and pulling out his watch, puts it up in his coat pocket, loſing it the next time he pulls out his handkerchief: In church he forgets to take off his hat 'till divine ſervice is half over, and when he comes out he leaves it behind him.

THE ſlothful man riding ſlowly upon his journey, ſees a full purſe on the road, but will not alight to examine its contents; his actions are mere dreams, indigeſted and unfiniſh'd, for his life is a continued ſlumber: Reſtiff and indolent he creeps heavily to the grave, without paſſions, without curioſity, for he would not riſe from his chair to ſee a coronation, nor quit his bed to ſave his friend's life.

THE man of taſte is a fair original, of which the faſhionable man is a finiſh'd copy.

THE man of prudence hates extravagance thro' principle; the diſcerning man thro' judgment.

THE man of wit commands our ſmiles; the induſtrious man our purſes.

A CERTAIN writer compares quacks to coblers, but they differ in this, a diſtreſs'd ſhoemaker, may be a good cobler, but a diſtreſs'd phyſician can never be a quack; the prudence of the multitude ſupports a cobler, but a quack lives by their ignorance: Add to this, that honeſty and coblerſhip are in no wiſe incompatible, but an honeſt quack never exiſted.

THE gameſter is a ſort of a land-pirate, who frequents taverns, where being ſhun'd by his acquaintances, he courts the company of ſtrangers for plunder; a mere tennis-ball, whom fortune diverts herſelf withal, for this day he ſtruts under three bars of lace, and the next abſconds in the remains of a borrow'd ſhirt. This week he revels at his lordſhip's table, and the next in company with footmen, ſtarves in a ſubterraneous diving-room; his diſeaſe is a ſcrbies of the mind, poverty its beſt phyſician, and death its infallible cure.

THE jealous man eſteems his wife an Eve, and all mankind ſerpents, his own brother not excepted; if his wife endeavours to pleaſe him, 'tis giving water to a mad dog: If not, 'tis keeping it from him; the former he interprets hypocriſy; the latter hatred; and his diſorder is encreaſed by either: His friendſhip is weaker than his love, for luſt can rekindle the latter, but the former is eternally forfeited for a look, a word, or a whiſper.

THE hyppiſh man's diſpoſition is ſolitary and ſuperſtitious, occaſion'd by a continued aſſociation of gloomy ideas. He repairs to his glaſs oftener than a beautiful nymph, but with different ſucceſs, for he leaves it, eternally diſſatisfied: Being ſeiz'd with the tooth-ache, he diſpatches meſſengers for a conſultation of phyſicians, together with a lawyer to draw up his laſt will; but if he has got a lax, he dreads being laid under water, conceiting himſelf to be the land of Egypt with the Nile running thro' him.

THE Valetudinarian perſecutes health as a jealous lover does his miſtreſs, who loſes her by teizing her. He examines his liquor by the laws of Hydroſtaticks, and meaſures the quantity of his food by the ſtate of the Atmoſphere. He may be known by the furniture of his ſtudy, which exhibits the ſavour of an horſe-ſtable, from the large quantities of his own urine collected in glaſſes, and ranged in order according to ſeniority: Under each glaſs he places notes pathognomical and ſymptomatical, upon the complexion, precipitation and taſte of it: In one corner ſtands Sanctorius and Blackmore, thumb'd like an old pariſh bible, and underneath a magazine of cupping-glaſſes, clyſter ſyringes and gally-pots, together with a large pair of ſcales, where he ſits in ballance thrice a day, 'till death deſtroys the equilibre.

ENVY is vanity with ignorance, or ambition with poverty, or rather a complication of all: The envious man ſickens at praiſes beſtow'd upon his neighbour, hates his good accompliſhments, covets his riches, and expoſes his errors: His proſperity he attributes to ſucceſs in knavery, and his adverſity to idleneſs and imprudence, but all his own miſcarriages are laid at the door of providence. In converſation he is the channel of ſcandal, and nothing but defamation can make him ſmile.

BEARDLESS youth and toothleſs old age are the dupes to flattery, which they receive as a lady does her lover, with ſeeming coyneſs, but ſecret ſatisfaction; otherwiſe, the flatterer is the moſt aukward villain alive, borrowing the maſk of friendſhip to ſo much diſadvantage, that three fourths of the world can ſee deſign and falſhood thro' it: But whoever is weak enough to ſwallow his adulations, may be ſaid to light a candle for a robber to plunder him by.

FORWARD men are the worſt vermin in ſociety: When once they get footing in your houſe, 'tis harder to diſlodge them than a colony of rats, and they become more troubleſome than a mouſe in your pantry, and as familiar as a flea in your chamber: Give a man of this character his Chriſtmas dinner, and you'll have the pleaſure of his company the year round: He declares himſelf an enemy to compliments and ceremony, but a friend to good fellowſhip; the former leads him into impertinence, and the latter renders him proof againſt affronts, ſo that 'tis impoſſible to get rid of him, unleſs peradventure by introducing him to a more opulent acquaintance.

CHOLERIC and quarrelſome men are like fire and air, two jarring elements, whoſe contact produces contention: The choleric man is a nation divided againſt itſelf; his reaſon dis tot'ring on her throne, and his paſſions are hourly ripe for rebellion: If he is married, his wife may be compared to a galley in a tempeſtuous ſea. The quarrelſome man is induſtrious to give affronts; the choleric, equally ſo to receive them: An imaginary contradiction awakens the reſentment of the latter, but the former will tread upon your toe to propagate miſchief.

THE

THE busy fellow is passionately fond of secrets, nor can you oblige him more than by making him your confident: His curiosity for secrets is like a sickly appetite, he swallows them greedily and disorges them the next moment: You may know him by his excessive complaisance and prodigious memory; for so great is the former, that he will at any time neglect his own business to perform your's, and so tenacious the latter, that he can recount to you the several marriages, issues, deaths, burials and christ'nings, that have reach'd his ears for seven years before: In his neighbourhood he is a kind of necessary evil, employ'd, or employing himself in every thing; at marriages a brideſman, at christ'nings a sponser, at feasts a carver, and at funerals a bearer: A Gazette for the living, and for the dead a passing bell.

RECEIPT for an ASTHMA.

MY good old friend! accept from me
The following rules without a fee.
An asthma is your case, I think,
So you must neither eat nor drink;
I mean of meat preserv'd in salt,
Or any liquor made of malt.
From season'd sauce avert your eyes,
From hams, and tongues, and pigeon pies.
If ven'son pasty's set before ye,
Each bit you eat memento mori.
Your supper nothing, if you please,
But above all no toasted cheese.
'Tis likely you will now observe,
What I observe will make you starve:
No, I allow you at a meal,
A neck, a loin, or leg of veal,
Young turkeys I allow you four,
Partridge and pullets half a score.
Of house-lamb boil'd eat quarters two,
The duce is in't if that wont do—!
Now as to liquor, why, indeed
What I advise, I send you, mead,
Glasses of this t'extinguish drought,
Take three with water, three without.
Let constant exercise be try'd,
And sometimes walk, and sometimes ride:
Health oft'ner comes from Blackdown hill,
Than from th' apothecary's bill.
Be not in haste, nor think to do
Your business with a purge or two;
Some, if they are not well at once,
Proclaim their doctor for a dunce:
Restless from quack to quack they range,
When 'tis themselves they ought to change;
Nature hates violence and force,
By method led and gentle course;
Rules and restraint you must endure,
What comes by time, 'tis time must cure.
The use of vegetables try,
And prize Pomona in a pye.
Whate'er you eat put something good in,
And worship Ceres in a pudding.
Young Bacchus' rites you must avoid,
And Venus must go unenjoy'd.
For breakfast, it is my advice,
Eat gruel, sago, barley, rice.
Take burdock roots, and, by my troth,
I'd mingle daisies in my broth
Thus may you draw with ease your breath,
Eluding long the dart of death.
Thus may you laugh, look clear and thrive,
Enrich'd by those whom you survive.
